News for Researchers – Citation Searching

Citation searching allows researchers to search for references on a topic starting from a known reference and to track citations of their own research articles and related research in their area of interest.

CDU subscribes to two citation databases; Scopus and Web of Science. Scopus covers over 19,500 journal titles, conference proceedings and web pages with an emphasis on scientific, technical, medical and social science literature. Web of Science covers over 12,000 journals, seminars and conference proceedings and includes science, social sciences and arts and humanities.

Web of Science example: Search for an article “Buffel grass as an invader and threat to biodiversity in arid environments”. The article has been cited in 3 other articles. Researchers can also create a citation alert which will keep them informed of new articles on the topic.

Google Scholar – Citations also allows researchers to track citations to their publications (including books), view publications by colleagues, and create a public profile.

A comparative analysis of the three citation databases can be read here. More information about using citation databases can be found here or come into the Library for assistance.
Political Fact Checkers

Want the political facts rather than the spin? There seem to be a number of fact-checking websites that claim to rate the accuracy of statements by elected officials and other influential people in the Australian political debate.

- ABC Fact Check
- Crikey Get Fact
- PolitiFact Australia
- The Conversation Election FactCheck

Or maybe you feel that “Political fact checkers – useful as pet rocks”.
