The Graduation Ceremony

Students participating in university graduation ceremonies join a rich tradition, which dates back to the 12th Century. The ceremony, presided over by the Chancellor, serves as the official conferral of awards obtained by students. Prior to the ceremony they are "graduands" – those eligible to graduate - but upon conferral they become graduates.

The Academic dress comprises a gown, and depending on the level of award, a stole or hood and a trenched or bonnet. In line with British university graduation tradition, the Charles Darwin University Chancellor’s robes are embroidered with gold thread, while the Vice-Chancellor’s robes are embroidered with silver. The official regalia worn by members of the Academic Procession reflect the diversity of qualifications and universities represented - the hoods worn by graduating students identify them as a Charles Darwin University graduate in their chosen discipline.

The official conferral of awards takes place during the ceremony and is undertaken by the Chancellor. After the official conferral of awards, each student will be individually acknowledged and presented with their award. This public acknowledgement is a very important part of the ceremony - it gives the graduate an opportunity to be congratulated on their achievement and it also serves to validate the student’s graduate status.

The Chancellor’s Chair

The Chancellor’s chair was a gift to the University from the Australian National University in 2009, and was made by Mr Timothy Foster. Mr Foster is a professional furniture maker and teacher with over 30 years’ experience in industry, and divides his time between working for commission and teaching. The chair is made from Delinia timber, which is a species native to New Guinea, where it was sustainably sourced and certified by the Forest Stewardship Council. It was chosen for its rich colour, fine grain, stability and strength, and also its relevance in proximity to Darwin.

The Vice-Chancellor’s and Deputy Chancellor’s chairs were made in 2011 by Mr Matt Davidson. Mr Davidson is a local furniture craftsman and builder whose work can be seen throughout Darwin, including the CDU Chancellery building and the Darwin Convention Centre. These chairs were designed to complement the Chancellor’s chair and are made from Silky Oak. This timber was chosen for its contrasting colour, although the figure and grain are very similar to the Chancellor’s chair.
The Seasons Fanfare

The Seasons Fanfare was commissioned by Charles Darwin University to coincide with its 25th Anniversary. Composed by Dr Leif Sundstrup, the work celebrates both the diverse Territory seasons and the celebration of the university ritual with understated transformations representing the Darwinian principles of life. Although a modern work in contraction, the fanfare is both accessible and memorable, framing the academic environment and lasting tradition of the Charles Darwin University.

The Fanfare represents both the antiquity and grandeur of university life, based on three recurring and transforming themes: The University, The Dignitaries, and The Seasons. Amongst the developing musical subjects throughout the fanfare can be heard distinct representations of the seasons including ‘the build up’ with thunder storms, slow moving breezes of the tranquil dry, and a hint of the Darwin’s Finches (Galápagos finches) which played an important part in his theories.

The work is written in a traditionally classical style to reflect the long and important history of the Charles Darwin University and its maturation over the past twenty-five years.

The Mace

For thousands of years the mace has been used as a symbol of government. Originally a weapon in the shape of a club, often spiked, it has evolved to become a decorative and ceremonial object of great value and beauty. The ceremonial mace is documented to have been used since the 16th Century. Carried by a Mace Bearer, it is intended to represent the protection of a person of authority, such as reigning monarchs and religious leaders. Oxford University began using a mace for ceremonial occasions in the late 16th Century and Cambridge University adopted a mace in 1626.

The mace is traditionally a gift, and the Charles Darwin University Mace was gifted from Flinders University Council in 2010. Glenice Lesley Matthews was commissioned to design and make the University Mace. Glenice Matthews, well known for her work as a silversmith, designed and made the Mace for Edith Cowan University.

Work on the design for the CDU Mace began in late 2010 and final approval of the design was given by the Chancellor in early 2011. It incorporates images of a “flame of knowledge” linking to the traditional use of firesticks as a way of passing on knowledge, Charles Darwin’s telescope and the pandanus. The CDU brand features strongly on a tropical timber shaft with bands of sterling silver and yellow gold.

Before completing the piece, however, Glenice Matthews passed away. Completion of the project was entrusted to Samuel Farmer, a silversmith who worked with Glenice for more than 20 years. In 1984, he designed and made the Ceremonial Mace and President’s Medallion for Pittsburg State University, Kansas, USA.

The Mace of Charles Darwin University represents the authority of the University Council and its head, the Chancellor, and was first used in May Graduation Ceremonies in 2013.
A Message from the Chancellor

As Chancellor of Charles Darwin University it is an honour and a privilege to congratulate the graduands of 2014.

Based on 50 years of education tradition, Charles Darwin University was formed through the merger of the Northern Territory University, Centralian College, the Northern Territory Rural College and the Menzies School of Health Research. This dynamic institution has grown into a place of learning for an increasing number of Territorians and people from across our nation and the world.

Charles Darwin University offers an increasingly flexible approach to education, with a wide range of study options, high standards of teaching and an engaging learning environment. This is a university that aims to inspire its students to acquire the skills and knowledge to change their worlds for their own good and the good of the community.

As well as being a celebration of knowledge, graduation ceremonies allow students to share their pride and satisfaction in achieving their goals with their family, friends, and the University staff who have supported and encouraged them throughout their studies.

Graduation should not be a farewell to Charles Darwin University. We look forward to welcoming back our graduates as members of the Alumni or through continuing formal studies and to the many symposia, lectures, concerts and events held at the University each year.

Congratulations again to the graduates of 2014. We have no doubt we will be hearing of your achievements in your work and the community in the future.

Her Honour the Honourable Sally Thomas AC
Chancellor
This is a very important event in your life as you graduate from Charles Darwin University. You will have grown in knowledge and understanding during your time as a student at the University and, by making the most of your university experiences will make a difference not only to your own future and that of your family, but importantly to the Northern Territory and the community in which you live and work.

You are part of a dynamic and rapidly changing world particularly in the generation of new knowledge and innovative approaches to solving complex globally relevant problems – ongoing change is quite simply part of life. Change also provides opportunities and challenges that I hope you will embrace and as a result make a real contribution to the adaptive and evolving society in which we live. Remember Charles Darwin, the namesake of our University, once said: “It is not the strongest of the species that survive, not the most intelligent, but the one most responsive to change.”

We live in an age where information on any subject is growing at an ever-increasing rate and technology is rapidly changing the way we live, work and enjoy ourselves. To respond to this changing environment, and to be a successful contributor to it, you must continue to learn and to strive to apply what you have learned to the challenges you face. I hope your time at Charles Darwin University has given you a thirst for life long learning and that you will be open to new ideas, and to doing things differently and for the better in the years ahead.

As a graduate of Charles Darwin University, you join the Alumni of a university that provides vibrant learning, life-changing experiences and graduating individuals with the ability to be excellent thinkers, workers and members of society: a university that equips its graduates with the generic skills to thrive in a complex world.

I hope you have enjoyed your university experience and that you will continue to learn and, through your words and actions, contribute to the development and reputation of Charles Darwin University, a university that aspires to work with its alumni, wherever they may be, to provide an enriching experience.

This ceremony is one of celebration; you have achieved a significant milestone and we are proud of you. We join with your family and friends in saying “congratulations” and best wishes for a bright and rewarding future.

Thesis Title: Risk Status of Selected Indigenous Chicken Breeds in Java, Indonesia: Challenges and Opportunities for Conservation

This research establishes the risk status of three indigenous chicken breeds in Java. It investigates how and why these breeds are kept and determines the financial incentives required ensuring participation of keepers in formal conservation / breeding programs of these breeds. The research adopts a mixed-methods approach, combining case-study research with expert interviews and a mainly quantitative survey of chicken keepers. The survey elicits socio-demographic data and details about chicken production systems. Willingness to participate in chicken conservation is measured using contingent valuation. The research identifies that the breeds are at risk of extinction and safeguarding the breeds into the future will require concerted conservation efforts. A successful conservation effort should address various aspects of chicken production systems including feed, chicken health and breeding strategies. Conservation payments should be offered to keepers as financial incentives to prevent them from switching to non-indigenous breeds. Indigenous chicken breeds are an important part of animal genetic diversity. This research contributes significantly to the conservation and management of indigenous chicken breeds in Indonesia by providing robust at-risk estimates and laying the scientific foundations for a systematic and holistic conservation approach.

Thesis Title: Success Factors for Indigenous Wildlife-based Enterprise in Northern Australia

Though exceedingly valuable in many ways, much of the Indigenous estate in northern Australia has limited potential for market-based economic development. However, some Indigenous Australians are using wildlife commercially to supplement livelihoods, expand natural resource management capacity and enhance their ability to maintain cultural obligations on country. In this research, three case studies were constructed to analyse success factors for Indigenous wildlife-based enterprises in northern Australia. Nine field trips to three sites were conducted. Seven key success factors were identified: the resource base; minimal anti-use sentiment; demonstrable sustainability; markets; access; social capital; and supportive institutions. This thesis will be of interest to Indigenous people and communities, development practitioners, policy-makers and natural resource managers working in livelihood development and sustainable use of wildlife. The case studies within provide examples of natural resource-based enterprises that allow Indigenous people to engage in market-based commerce from remote communities in northern Australia.

Thesis Title: Plasmodium Knowlesi: Epidemiology, Clinical Features, Diagnosis and Pathogenesis

The monkey parasite Plasmodium knowlesi commonly causes human malaria in Malaysian Borneo. This thesis aimed to investigate the epidemiology, clinical features, diagnosis and pathogenesis of knowlesi malaria. Studies included retrospective review of malaria records at a district hospital in northeast Sabah; a 20-year review of malaria notifications to the Sabah Health Department; and a prospective study of all malaria patients admitted to a tertiary-referral hospital in Sabah. We found that P. knowlesi was the most common cause of malaria in Sabah, with incidence increasing. P. knowlesi was the most common cause of severe malaria at the tertiary hospital, with risk of severe disease 3-fold that of P. falciparum. Clinical features and risk factors for severity are described, and diagnostic methods evaluated. These studies confirm the importance of knowlesi malaria as a public health problem in Sabah and extend the existing information regarding the epidemiological, clinical features, diagnosis and treatment of knowlesi malaria.

Thesis Title: First and Second Order Leaders and Leadership: A New Model for Understanding the Roles and Interactions between Leaders and Managers Working in Contemporary Australian-based Organisations Undergoing Change

Continuous demands for quick results, an ever improving bottom line, shorter time frames and constant change have had particular impact on the role of leadership, which has become more nebulous over the past 25 years and yet, at the same time, is held more responsible for organisational success. The central research question ‘What is the role of leaders and leadership in contemporary Australian-based organisations undergoing change?’ addresses whether existing leadership practice is meeting modern organisational demands and identifies how our current and future leaders can be better supported in a changing organisational context. The investigation finds that leadership continues to evolve as a discipline and provides new insights into the nature and neuroscience behind contemporary leadership; provides guidelines and a framework for improving the performance and competence of contemporary Australian-based leaders; and identifies eight ways in which leadership can be hijacked from its intended purpose. In so doing this research makes an original contribution to empirical and theoretical work in the field of leadership practice, education policy and design.

Thesis Title: Organising Tourism Providers on Remote Touring Tracks as Geographically Distributed Teams

This study explains the organisation of tourism providers on remote touring tracks (RTTs) as geographically distributed teams (GDTs). The GDT framework comprised seven elements: geographic dispersion, information and communication technologies, team membership, cultural diversity, shared mindset, collaboration, and leadership. Two similar Australian case studies, the Gunbarrel Highway and the Oodnadatta Track were examined. The results present a rich description of the organisation of tourism providers on RTTs. The study is of practical significance to tourism providers on RTTs, as it provides insight into the practical functioning of these destinations. It also identifies and classifies tourism providers, their locations and how they interact. These insights have the potential to assist tourism providers reflect on current practice and consider future possibilities. The utility of the GDT lens as a diagnostic framework and as a prognostic tool was affirmed.

Thesis Title: Fate of Key Food-borne Pathogens Associated with Intensive Pig and Poultry Farming Environments

Intensive pig and poultry farming in Australia can be a source of pathogens with implications for food-safety and/or human illness. Seven studies were undertaken with the following objectives: assess the types of zoonotic pathogens in waste; assess the transfer of pathogens during re-use both within the shed and externally in the environment; and the potential for movement of pathogens via aerosols. In the first and second studies the extent of zoonotic pathogens was evaluated in both piggery effluent and chicken litter and Salmonella and Campylobacter were detected in both wastes. In the third study the dynamics of Salmonella during litter re-use was examined and results showed a trend for lower Salmonella levels and serovar diversity in re-used litter compared to new litter. Thus, re-use within the poultry farming system posed no increased risk. The fourth study addressed the direct risks of pathogens to farm workers due to re-use of piggery effluent within the pig shed. Based on air-borne Escherichia coli (E. coli) levels, re-using effluent did not pose a risk. In the fifth study high levels of Arcobacter spp. were detected in effluent ponds and freshly irrigated soils with potential food-safety risks during the irrigation of food-crops and pasture. The sixth and seventh studies addressed the risks from aerosols from mechanically ventilated sheds. Staphylococci were shown to have potential as markers, with air-borne levels gradually dropping and reaching background levels at 400 m distance. Salmonella was detected (at low levels) both inside and outside the shed (at 10 m). Campylobacter was detected only once inside the shed during the 3-year period (at low levels). Results showed there was minimal risk to humans living adjacent to poultry farms. This is the first comprehensive analysis studying key food-safety pathogens and potential public health risks associated with intensively farmed pigs and poultry in Australia.

This thesis presents a comprehensive analysis of the gambling activities of Aboriginal people living in remote areas of the Northern Territory, Australia. Extended fieldwork was carried out in the remote community of Maningrida, Arnhem Land. The research focused on card games played in the community. In addition, research was conducted in a large urban gambling venue in Darwin, the capital of the Northern Territory, that examined remote Aboriginal people’s access to, and use of, poker machines (electronic gaming machines). The findings describe complex social, economic and political processes at work within both community card games and the urban gambling venue from an anthropological perspective. The findings suggest that Aboriginal people in Maningrida benefit socially, economically and politically through membership in the informal regulatory structures that existed within card games. However, the community also identified problems relating to card games, particularly in relation to the impact of card games on children. This research also found that, although playing poker machines in an urban gambling environment was an activity that remote Aboriginal people engaged in and enjoyed, it did not offer the same social and economic opportunities as card games. There was a distinct reliance on social relationships within the urban gambling venue, and the efforts and attempts made by people to continue to gamble in groups (despite the individualised nature of poker machines) was significant. Aside from winning a large sum of money, the economic benefits for remote Aboriginal people attending the venue were minimal. The information gathered through this fieldwork has significant implications in terms of the development of relevant harm-minimisation strategies. Finally, the research found that the Aboriginal people involved in this research defined ‘problem gambling’ differently from mainstream definitions. The research found that Aboriginal people defined ‘problem gambling’ as a person neglecting or rejecting social relationships and obligations as a result of gambling. The findings from this research identify a significant need for the development of a national strategy in Australia to address the issues that Aboriginal people face in relation to gambling.

This thesis investigated microcontaminants in Darwin Harbour and looked for evidence of effects on the marine snail Telescopium telescopium. Water, sediment and T. telescopium from estuarine sites exposed to treated wastewater and corresponding reference sites were screened for a range of microcontaminants. The bioassays YES and YAS were used to assess (anti)estrogenic and (anti)androgenic activity. Tissues of T. telescopium were analysed for microcontaminants, along with nitrogen (15N) and carbon (13C) stable isotope analysis to obtain information on the biological uptake of nutrients from wastewater effluent. Histopathology was carried out to provide health status information. The results demonstrate that wastewater effluent is a major source of microcontaminants to the marine environment of Darwin Harbour, aquatic organisms are exposed to complex mixtures of chemicals of unknown toxicity and T. telescopium is a suitable bioindicator for sewage-derived compounds.

Thesis Title: Elucidation of the Photochemical Reactions Involved in the Production and Destruction of Formaldehyde, Hydrogen Peroxide and Methyl Hydroperoxide

Observations of three atmospheric gases, formaldehyde, hydrogen peroxide and methyl hydroperoxide, were made at Aspendale (38.02519°S, 145.10154°E; located about 27 km from the Melbourne city centre on a bearing of about 153°SSE) from 2 September 1999 until 25 February 2001. The observations showed that the average mixing ratios of formaldehyde, hydrogen peroxide and methyl hydroperoxide in the atmosphere were 747 ± 14 ppt, 828 ± 15 ppt and 171 ± 4 ppt, respectively. Simple kinetic equations were derived to calculate the mixing ratios at 40°S latitude during summer midday. The calculated mixing ratios were very close to the observed mixing ratios, indicating the simple kinetic equations included all the major production and destruction reactions in clean air. The observed mixing ratios compared closely to the mixing ratios of the gases which were predicted with an air pollution model linked to a Chemical Transport Model (TAPM/CTM). The average mixing ratios of formaldehyde, hydrogen peroxide and methyl hydroperoxide from TAPM/CTM were 696 ± 11 ppt, 743 ± 6 ppt and 107 ± 1 ppt respectively. It is expected that the atmospheric fate of methyl peroxy radicals is controlled by the mixing ratio of nitric oxide. Methyl peroxy radicals in the atmosphere can have two possible fates. One is to produce formaldehyde after reacting with nitric oxide and then oxygen to produce formaldehyde. The other is to react with hydroperoxyl radicals to produce methyl hydroperoxide. The formation of formaldehyde should preferentially occur in polluted Melbourne air when nitric oxide mixing ratios are high. Conversely, methyl hydroperoxide should preferentially form in clean Melbourne air after a cool change brings air that has very low nitric oxide mixing ratios. The results of the observations show that the ratio of methyl hydroperoxide to formaldehyde is low during north-westerly winds with high nitric oxide mixing ratios and high during south-westerly winds with very low nitric oxide mixing ratios. This proved that nitric oxide does actually control the formation of formaldehyde and methyl hydroperoxide in urban air masses.

Thesis Title: Beds are Burning: Small Mammal Responses to Fire in Tropical Savannas of Northern Australia

The use of fire to manage and conserve biodiversity is an ongoing challenge throughout the world. An analysis of published data covering over 100 different small mammal species found that the overall negative effect of fire was relatively small but significantly greater for species dependent on fire-sensitive habitats (e.g. rainforests) and those with body mass between 101-1000 g. The response of five small mammal species to fire during a landscape-scale fire experiment in Kakadu National Park fire was examined. Growth rates were not influenced by different fire regimes but survival and recruitment were reduced for a number of species when the fire intensity was high. Spatially explicit population viability analysis demonstrated that frequency of fires rather than extent presents the greatest risk to population persistence and indicates that prevailing fire management regimes may be unfavourable for some species.

Thesis Title: The Bacteriology of Bronchiectasis and Impact of Azithromycin on Upper and Lower Airway Bacteria and Resistance in Australian Indigenous Children

Bronchiectasis is common in Australian Indigenous children. Early detection, knowledge of causation, and appropriate treatment are needed to prevent disease progression and early death in adulthood. This is the first research on the bacteriology of bronchiectasis in Australian Indigenous children. The main bacterial pathogens were the same as in other children with this disease. Additionally, the same strains were found in upper and lower airway specimens, strongly supporting the hypothesis that aspiration of nasopharyngeal secretions contributes to the pathology. The antibiotic azithromycin was associated with reduced nasopharyngeal carriage of the three main bacteria, but increased carriage of azithromycin-resistant organisms. In a clinical trial, respiratory exacerbation frequency was significantly reduced in children who received azithromycin compared to placebo, possibly due to reduced aspiration of secretions. This is encouraging and research continues.

Thesis Title: Is Bentham’s Vision of a Comprehensive Criminal Code Suitable as a Model Design for a Code?

The thesis examined whether Jeremy Bentham’s concept of a criminal code having no blank spaces, thereby minimising the role of the common law and judicial interpretation, was first, desirable and secondly, achievable. The central question was to examine whether Bentham’s vision of the legislature clearly stating its intentions sufficient for the ordinary citizen to fully comprehend his or her criminal liability was beyond the capacity of any criminal code architect in the 21st century. The conclusion reached was that the development in criminal law theory since Bentham’s death in 1832, most notably the U.S. Model Penal Code in 1962 and the Model Criminal Code in Australia in 1992, leaves open the possibility that Bentham’s vision is more achievable today than in Bentham’s own era.

Thesis Title: The Role of Broad-Scale, Multi-Species Monitoring for Conservation, with Particular Reference to Small Mammals in Kakadu National Park

In this thesis I describe a body of work designed to investigate recent evidence of decline in the biodiversity, particularly small native mammals that inhabit Kakadu National Park. Through an extensive fieldwork program involving surveying historic and new sites, I provide further evidence of change in mammal populations within the Park and provide evidence that these changes are related to a number of threatening processes including invasion by the cane toad and potentially inappropriate fire regimes. I go on to discuss the use of broad-scale biodiversity monitoring programs as a tool for managers to gain a better understanding of the nature and extent of changes in biodiversity within Kakadu National Park. I also provide some examples of how existing programs could be expanded and improved to enhance the capacity of park managers to detect and respond to biodiversity management issues in a timely and effective manner.

Thesis Title: Scabies and Strongyloidiasis Prevalence before and after a Mass Drug Administration in a Remote Aboriginal Community in the Northern Territory

Aim: Effects of mass drug administration (MDA) on the prevalence of scabies and strongyloidiasis in a remote Aboriginal community. Method: A population census and MDA was conducted at month 0 and 12 to screen participants for scabies and strongyloidiasis and administer medications. Participants were administered a stat dose of 200 µg/kg ivermectin unless their weight was <15 kg or pregnant. Participants diagnosed with scabies and/or strongyloidiasis received a 2nd treatment 2-3 weeks after the first medication was administered. Results: At month 0, 1012 (80%) participants were screened, scabies prevalence was 4% and strongyloidiasis was 21%. At month 12, 1060 participants were screened, 702 that had been seen previously and 358 new entries. The prevalence of scabies increased to 9% from an outbreak associated with a crusted scabies participant whilst strongyloidiasis prevalence decreased to 6%. Conclusion: MDA reduced the strongyloidiasis prevalence but was unable to sustain a reduction in scabies prevalence.
In this globalised world where people of different cultures are interspersing at an increasing rate, many individuals of mixed cultural heritage are searching for a sense of belonging. While some are content to move from one culture to another, others find themselves on the borderlines or in-between cultures. Through visual art, some of these individuals have expressed their identity through a mix of cultural and other influences. This practice-based research concentrates on these multi-faceted cultural spaces in trying to understand this position of uncertainty. Through printmaking, silk paper sculptural forms, calligraphy, audio-visual and installation works, studio process investigates multiple identity constructions of Australians with Chinese heritage, in particular, those born in Australia. Investigation focuses on expressing diversity, cultural identity issues and representing the persistent and oscillating search for a sense of place on the borderlines of cultures.

Thesis Title: Improving Indonesian University Students’ Spoken English using Group Work and Cooperative Learning

This study explores approaches to improving the spoken English skills of students at a private university in Indonesia, where many students still encounter difficulties in spoken English. It proceeded in two stages. The first stage employed action research and found that using small group work to encourage student involvement gradually improved their confidence in speaking English. The second stage used quasi-experimental research to explore the use of cooperative learning to improve students’ spoken English skills. The qualitative data showed that cooperative learning can be useful for improving students’ spoken English skills. This was supported by a result from the quantitative data which showed significant improvements in students’ speaking duration if not in their speaking quality. These findings point to a positive role for group work and cooperative learning in conversational English classes in Indonesia in the future.

Soil microorganisms may respond to metal stress by a shift in microbial community from metal sensitive to metal resistant microorganisms. In this study microbes isolated from soils irrigated with wastewater from Ranger Uranium Mine in northern Australia were tested both for their resistance to uranium (U), and their community level responses to variations in soil U and physicochemical parameters. Microbes isolated from soil by culturing grew under different (field) concentrations of U added to culture media in the form of uranyl nitrate and fungi out-competed the bacteria in media with very high U concentrations. However, this shift from bacteria to fungi that occurred in culture was not observed in soils with very high U concentrations under field conditions. This suggests that the U present in the field may be less bioavailable than U added to the culture media. Moreover, there was no difference in the cultured microbial community isolated from soils with different U concentrations which may be due to the fact that culturing technique captures only less than 1% of the soil microbial community. To explore this further, the soil microbial community was measured by culture-independent next generation sequencing using the 454 platform or pyrosequencing. One hundred and forty four soil samples were pyrosequenced and 183,317 bacterial V6 sequences were obtained. Using pyrosequencing, the bacterial community in soil with background levels of U was different from those in soil with elevated U. Indicator species analysis showed that bacterial OTUs closely related to members of Kitasatospora, Sphingobacteria, Candidate_division_WS3 and Rhodobium were only present at medium, high and very high U sites during all the sampling times. A significant seasonal and temporal change in bacterial community was also measured as a result of seasonal and temporal change in soil U and other physicochemical variables. Uranium resistant microbes isolated in this study could be used to study resistance mechanisms and bioremediation potential. Furthermore, bacterial species associated with higher U concentrations may serve as useful indicators of U contamination in the wet-dry tropics.

Thesis Title: The Effectiveness of Mobile Preschool (Northern Territory) in Improving School Readiness for very remote Indigenous Children

This study provided the first systematic data regarding efficacy of preschool programs for very remote Northern Territory Indigenous children including baselines for socio-demographic and health characteristics. The study quantified the effects of program availability, attendance and preschool program quality on follow-up measures of development and school readiness using the Australian Early Development Index. When controlling for mothers smoking during pregnancy, children attending more than 80 days of mobile preschool were 4.9 times more likely to not be developmentally vulnerable than children attending less than 80 days. (95% CI: 1.72 – 13.95). The results inform future improvements in children’s developmental outcomes by improving children’s attendance and professional learning for preschools educators to achieve high quality curriculum, pedagogy and assessment practices matched to the needs of children and families in disadvantaged and complex learning environments.

Thesis Title: Contested Discourses: Aboriginal Attitudes towards Non-native Plants and Engagement in Weed Management in Cape York, Northern Australia

This thesis explores Aboriginal attitudes towards non-native plants, including weeds, identifying the impediments to Aboriginal engagement in weed management, investigating how future engagement should take place. Ethnographic and ethnobotanical research was undertaken in two case study areas in Cape York, north Queensland on Wik and Northern Kaanju Aboriginal clan estates. The results show that Aboriginal people hold a wide range of attitudes towards non-native plants and that Aboriginal motivations for, and approaches to, managing weeds differ from those of Western scientists and government agencies. These differences originate primarily from competing world views and from the existence of a pervasive nature/culture dichotomy. To achieve effective collaborative weed management new approaches and epistemological frameworks will need to be adopted to give more weight to Aboriginal voices. Undertaking a world view approach can provide a useful framework for studying attitudes to weeds and their management on Aboriginal lands in northern Australia.

Thesis Title: Integration of the Ecosystem Sector and Climate Change Mitigation in Carbon Accounting Schemes: Practical and Policy Approaches

In 1992 the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (the Rio Earth Summit) addressed two linked global crises: climate change and biodiversity decline. The Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change were opened simultaneously for signature. Climate change provides an urgent incentive to develop mechanisms to reduce or prevent further degradation of ecosystems particularly through deforestation. Working together, abatement in this ecosystem sector and in the energy sector could drive most global emissions reductions. However, negotiations leading to the 1997 Kyoto Protocol, which crystallized the commitment of the UNFCCC, forfeited the inclusion of the ecosystem sector for largely political and ideological reasons. This thesis by prior publications suggests that the result is the decoupling of the ecosystem sector from climate change policy, and that this continues to drive discordant policies at international, national and regional levels.

Thesis Title: If VET is the Answer, what was the Question? Theorising an Australian Machinery of Population Control

The under-theorised common sense of vocational education and training and its ability to incorporate and transform ideas such as transparency, discipline and consumption are the focus of "If vocational education and training is the answer, what was the question? Theorising public policy and the behaviour of citizens." Using research techniques from ethnography, this narrative summary analyses the development and maturation of the National Training System as it was implemented in the Northern Territory in response to Commonwealth initiatives. Both governments have used the inclusiveness of vocational education and training to produce and reproduce a unique Australian citizen-worker-consumer who is expected to behave in a normal manner while undertaking a lifelong project of self-improvement. Vocational education and training provides a mutually acceptable, banal technology to frame the power/knowledge relationship between the population and those who are elected to govern. Conceiving of this assemblage as absence provides continuous public policy flexibility.
