

Expression of Interest for CDU-HREC Volunteer Position: Community Member / Lay Person

The Human Research Ethics Committee (HREC) of the Charles Darwin University reviews projects and other activities undertaken at the University which involve research conducted with or about people. The committee consists of a mixture of University staff and community members covering various areas of expertise and membership categories as determined by the 'National Statement on Ethical Conduct in Human Research'.

The University is currently seeking applications from persons who are:

- interested in ethical issues involving human research in the areas of social science, environmental management, law, business, health and education.
- prepared to express their views,
- not affiliated with the University, and
- not currently involved in medical, scientific, legal or academic work.

The HREC meets seven times each year (on a Wednesday, approximately every six weeks), from 9am until approximately midday, depending on the number and quality of projects.

Whilst members receive no remuneration, the responsibilities are not onerous, and the experience can be extremely rewarding. The meetings are held at CDU Casuarina Campus; however, they can also be attended via Zoom.
