FINDING THESSES

During the course of doing your PhD or Masters thesis, it will be useful for you to consult theses completed by other research students. Looking at other theses can help you:

• discover what has already been written on your research topic
• refine a research topic
• identify gaps in your topic of interest.

It will also be useful for you to see how theses are laid out, and to see what a methodology chapter or a literature review looks like before you start on your own.
At Charles Darwin University (CDU), you can access theses in hard copy or online. Theses written by CDU research students are available from the Library.

They are also being made available through CDU eSpace, the University’s institutional repository.
For other Australian theses you can search the Trove database, which is accessible from the Library’s web page.

ProQuest Dissertations and Theses (PQDT) is a database which allows you to search for international theses, predominantly those from the United States and Europe. This database is also accessible through the Library’s web page.

This Workshop will guide you through the process of finding theses at CDU.
Searching for CDU Theses

Ecotourism: a sustainable option? / edited by Erlet Cater and Gwen Lowman
Royal Geographical Society (Great Britain)
Ecotourism is a form of travel which minimizes the negative impact of tourism on local communities and environments. Ecotourism is considered the fastest growing market in the tourism industry, with an annual growth rate of 5% worldwide. Around the globe, ecotourism is quickly becoming one of the most popular travel options available. This study examined the factors related to responsible environmental behavior of visitors to Thailand’s popular national parks.
